

I am a simple person with a simple idea of what's fair. When a huge media conglomerate decides to push a political agenda--not during an honest editorial spot but on prime time disguised as unbiased news-- and then not open time for rebuttal or a different perspective, I say that's not fair.

Whether it actually violates Federal election law is for the courts to decide, but in my opinion it violates the public trust of the media to provide for balanced reporting and an opportunity for democratic discourse. These Sinclair shenanigans need closer examination by regulators. Please do something.

Thank you.
